“Creating Intellectually Stimulating Environments in Large Classrooms”

Dr. Diane O’Dowd

Vice Provost, Academic Personnel
HHMI Professor, Developmental and Cell Biology
University of California, Irvine

This talk will cover out attempts at creating intellectually stimulating environments in large classrooms. The strategies I will discuss can be employed in large classes but they are equally useful in smaller classes where they are often just a bit easier to implement. I will demonstrate some of the approaches we use, discuss some results of our education research and end with what I spend a lot of time thinking about in my administrative role as Vice Provost of Academic Personnel, and that is about institutional changes that support innovative approaches to education in research universities.
